19TH CENTURY ENGLISH OAK UPHOLSTERED BENCH WITH TURNED LEGS AND NAILHEAD TRIM

$2,995

This 19th-century English bench is crafted in oak and combines restrained proportions with strong, traditional detailing. The rectangular upholstered seat, newly recovered in a neutral linen, is finished with a continuous line of nailhead trim, giving the piece a clean architectural edge without excess ornament.

The base is where the character sits. The turned legs are well-proportioned and connected by side stretchers, as well as a central stretcher, forming a stable H-form structure typical of English country furniture. The turning is deliberate rather than decorative—balanced, functional, and consistent with late 19th-century workshop production. The oak has developed a warm, medium-brown patina that contrasts well with the lighter upholstery.

It works easily at the end of a bed, in a hallway, or as occasional seating in a living space. The scale is practical—substantial enough to read as a piece of furniture, not an accent, but not oversized.
