19TH CENTURY ENGLISH PINE KNOCKDOWN WARDROBE WITH PANELED DOORS

$9,600

This substantial 19th century English pine wardrobe offers the kind of honest scale and utility that makes English storage furniture so enduringly appealing. Built with a tall molded cornice above vertically arranged paneled doors, it has a restrained architectural presence that reads well in both traditional and more pared-back interiors. The warm honey-brown pine shows attractive grain variation throughout, with darker wear and age concentrated along the moldings, edges, and base, giving the piece real surface character rather than a flat, over-restored look.

Inside, the wardrobe opens to a practical fitted interior with upper shelving, hanging space, and lower drawers, making it useful for clothing, linens, or general household storage. The deep cornice, canted front corners, and paneled sides give the cabinet a more finished and commanding profile than a simpler country example. It would work well in a bedroom, dressing room, or large hallway, and it also has enough presence to be used in a retail or design setting.

The back and parts of the interior appear to have been altered or reworked over time, which is not unusual in a utilitarian piece of this scale and age. Overall, it remains a handsome and highly functional English wardrobe with strong decorative impact.
