19TH CENTURY MOROCCAN CARVED WOOD STOOL WITH SPINDLE PANELS

$2,800

This 19th-century Moroccan stool is distinguished by its richly carved structure and intricate geometric detailing. Crafted in solid wood, the frame is articulated with a series of small turned spindles arranged in panels along each side, creating a rhythmic, lattice-like effect that reflects traditional North African woodworking techniques.

The architecture is compact and well balanced, with corner posts rising into a cushioned seat that has been recently upholstered in a neutral woven fabric. Beneath the spindle panels, shaped aprons with subtle scalloped edges add depth and variation to the silhouette. The legs terminate in rounded bun feet, grounding the piece while maintaining its compact proportions.

The craftsmanship is particularly evident in the repetition and precision of the turned elements, which give the stool a strong decorative presence without overwhelming its function. It works equally well as a low seat, a footrest, or an accent piece, and pairs easily with both rustic and more curated interiors where texture and handwork are valued.
