BLACK FOREST ANTLER-MOUNTED OAK SPIRITS CABINET, CIRCA 1900

$7,500

A richly textured and visually commanding Black Forest spirits cabinet, crafted in Germany around 1900. This compact yet sculptural piece is clad in a carved faux bois surface and dramatically mounted with an array of naturally shed antlers, each one artfully arranged to create bold geometric patterns across the front, sides, and top. Bone rosettes and a carved medallion anchor the central axis, flanked by finely wrought antler grips.

The top drawer opens above a two-door cabinet that folds outward to reveal an interior likely intended for bottles and barware, complete with internal shelving and a drop-front panel for mixing or display. Interior panels are constructed from warm golden oak, contrasting the dark exterior and adding refinement to the rustic form. The scale, materials, and antler-heavy design suggest it was intended for a hunting lodge or alpine retreat, though it now offers striking storage for collectors and decorators alike.

A rare and superb example of Black Forest craftsmanship with bold graphic presence.
