ENGLISH 19TH CENTURY BURR WALNUT CABINET WITH GLAZED UPPER DOORS

$12,600

This English cabinet dates to the 19th century and is veneered throughout in richly figured burr walnut, selected for its dramatic grain and warm, golden-brown tonality. The piece is constructed in two parts, with a glazed upper bookcase section resting on a lower enclosed cabinet, a format typical of English storage furniture designed for both display and practical use.

The upper section features a pair of glazed doors divided by delicate muntins, allowing for the display of books, ceramics, or decorative objects while maintaining a refined, architectural presence. The interior provides generous vertical capacity, making the cabinet suitable for use as a display cupboard. The lower section is fitted with paneled doors opening to a deep storage compartment, supplemented by two interior drawers, offering functional concealed storage below the display area.

The burr walnut veneer is consistently well-matched across the façade, sides, and friezes, with attractive figuring visible on all principal surfaces. The cabinet is finished with restrained moldings and a projecting cornice, lending balance and proportion without excessive ornamentation. The interior secondary woods and back panels are consistent with period construction.

Well suited for use in a library, study, dining room, or traditional interior, this cabinet combines strong vertical presence with practical storage. A solid example of 19th-century English furniture, valued for its material quality, usable scale, and decorative walnut veneer.
