ENGLISH 19TH CENTURY MAHOGANY BOOKCASE WITH GLASS DOORS AND CARVED ROSETTES

$7,995

An English mahogany bookcase from the 19th century with glass doors, carved rosettes and acanthus leaves. Born in England during the 19th century, this exquisite mahogany bookcase features a distinct two-part design, with an upper section that is narrower than the lower one. The upper section is adorned with glass doors, revealing inner shelves perfect for displaying books and cherished items. These doors are framed by delicately carved rosettes in the corners, adding a touch of refined detail. The lower section of the bookcase presents wooden doors, continuing the theme of carved rosettes on the corners. This design choice ensures a cohesive and harmonious aesthetic throughout the piece. The cornice is beautifully carved with a frieze of acanthus leaves, which enhances the bookcase's classical appeal and adds an element of sophistication. Raised on sturdy bracket feet, this 19th-century mahogany bookcase is both stable and visually appealing. The rich mahogany wood, combined with the intricate carvings of rosettes and acanthus leaves, makes this piece a stunning addition to any room. Ideal for use in a living room, study, or library, this bookcase provides ample storage and display space while serving as a striking focal point. Its blend of functional design and decorative artistry ensures it will be a cherished addition to any home. The timeless appeal and exquisite craftsmanship of this English mahogany bookcase celebrate the beauty and utility of period furniture, offering both aesthetic beauty and practical functionality.
