ENGLISH BARLEY TWIST BENCH WITH UPHOLSTERED SEAT, CIRCA 1900

$5,500

An English barley twist bench from circa 1900, built on a dark oak frame with the deep, tight spirals typical of late Victorian and early Edwardian joinery. The legs and stretchers are well-articulated, with carved block joints adding a traditional decorative note without interrupting the rhythm of the turning. The rectangular seat is newly upholstered in a neutral linen-blend fabric and finished with a perimeter of spaced nailhead trim that keeps the profile crisp.

The proportions make it versatile: ideal at the foot of a bed, pulled up beneath a window, or used as extra seating in an entry hall or living room. It's a practical, durable piece—the structure is solid, the finish has a mellow age, and the updated seat gives it immediate usability in contemporary interiors.

A clean, well-balanced English bench with classic barley twist detailing and the quiet gravitas that suits both traditional and transitional rooms.
