ENGLISH FAUX BAMBOO IRON HALL TREE WITH MIRROR AND UMBRELLA STAND, CIRCA 1900

$6,750

A striking English faux bamboo hall tree in cast iron, dating to circa 1900, combining sculptural presence with practical function. The piece is designed in the aesthetic of natural bamboo, with articulated nodes and branching forms rendered in metal, creating a highly decorative yet durable structure.

The tall back supports a central shaped mirror, framed within an intricate lattice of intersecting “bamboo” elements. Multiple hooks extend outward at varying heights, offering ample space for coats, hats, or walking sticks. Below, a small open shelf provides additional utility, while the base is fitted with two removable metal drip trays intended for umbrellas or canes.

The overall composition is vertical and architectural, making it particularly well suited for an entry hall or mudroom where both function and visual impact are desired. Pieces of this type reflect the late 19th-century fascination with natural forms interpreted through industrial materials, often associated with English country house interiors.

Its combination of height, texture, and utility makes it an especially decorative solution for organized storage in a refined interior.
