ENGLISH MIDCENTURY PATINATED BRASS AND GLASS THREE-LIGHT LANTERN

$3,750

This English midcentury lantern has a clean, architectural silhouette softened by a few restrained decorative details. The square glazed body is suspended beneath a shaped upper section capped by a broad pagoda-like roof, while the pierced gallery and small ball finials add just enough ornament to keep the design lively without losing its tailored feel. The warm patinated brass-toned finish gives the fixture a mellow surface that works well in both traditional and updated interiors.

Inside, three candle-form lights rise from a scrolling central support with leaf-form bobeches, creating a pleasing contrast between the lantern's crisp geometry and the more classical detailing of the interior armature. The transparent glass panels keep the fixture visually light despite its strong outline, making it well suited for an entry, powder room, hall, stair landing, or breakfast area. Its size is especially useful: large enough to make an impression, but not oversized.

Altogether, this is a handsome English hanging lantern with an easy midcentury character and a versatile finish that can bridge antique, traditional, and mixed interiors.
