ENGLISH OAK AND RUSH STOOL WITH PAD AND BALL FEET, CIRCA 1900

$1,700

Crafted in England around 1900, this charming oak stool features a handwoven rush seat and a subtly sculptural frame with traditional joinery. The square seat showcases a classic checkerboard rush pattern, tightly woven and slightly dished for comfort and authenticity.

The solid oak frame is lightly tapered with rounded corners, transitioning into elegantly turned legs ending in pad feet raised on petite balls. The side stretchers have a gentle serpentine curve, adding just a touch of movement to the otherwise restrained design. Rich in texture and patina, the oak displays warm brown tones and visible grain, reflecting a century of age and use.

Whether used as a fireside perch, a dressing stool, or a decorative accent in a country house interior, this piece balances rustic charm with quiet sophistication. Its petite footprint and handcrafted character make it a versatile choice for both traditional and collected spaces.
