ENGLISH PINE SIDE TABLE WITH BLACK MARBLE TOP AND X-FORM BASE, CIRCA 1880

$3,995

This English side table dates to circa 1880 and features a straightforward, utilitarian design that emphasizes proportion, materials, and stability rather than ornament. The table is constructed from solid pine and stands on an X-form base, a practical and visually balanced structure that provides strength while giving the piece a lightly architectural character. The wood retains a dry, time-softened surface with visible grain, knots, and minor irregularities consistent with late 19th-century workmanship.

The rectangular top is fitted with a dark marble slab, presenting a deep charcoal-black tone with natural inclusions and subtle surface variation. The restrained finish and matte character complement the simplicity of the pine base, creating a pleasing contrast between light wood and dark marble without overpowering the form. The overall effect is functional and understated, aligned with the kind of furniture made for daily use rather than display.

Well proportioned and versatile, this table works comfortably as a side table, occasional table, or hall table. Its modest scale allows it to integrate easily into a range of interiors, including English Country House, rustic, industrial, or pared-back traditional settings.

A quietly handsome late 19th-century piece, valued for its honest construction and materials, and for the calm, grounded presence it brings to a room.
