ENGLISH PINE STOOL WITH TAPERED LEGS, CIRCA 1920–1940

$2,100

An English pine stool with a simple, functional profile and the warm surface expected from early 20th-century country workshop pieces. The top (measuring 13.75"W x 10.75"D) is cut in a slightly trapezoidal shape and retains an old central hand-grip hole typical of utilitarian shop or dairy stools. The legs (16 x 14.5") taper subtly and flare outward, giving the form stability and an easy stance, while the lower stretchers reinforce the frame without adding weight or visual bulk.

The pine shows a clear, honest patina: small marks, darker knots, and scattered wear that speak to decades of use without compromising solidity. It's the kind of straightforward English piece that works anywhere—bathroom, kitchen, entry, or as a plant stand—because the proportions are slim, the build is sturdy, and the look stays quietly authentic.

A practical and well-preserved English pine stool from the early 20th century, simple in the best way.
