FRENCH 19TH CENTURY LEATHER-TOP TABLE WITH SINGLE DRAWER

$4,500

This elegant French table dates to the 19th century and is distinguished by its original black leather top, finely tooled and gilt with scrolling corner motifs and a central decorative cartouche. The leather surface is framed by a warm-toned wooden surround, creating a crisp contrast that immediately signals its use as a writing, occasional, or small bureau-style table rather than a purely utilitarian piece.

The table stands on four slender, gently curved cabriole legs, giving it a light, refined profile typical of French furniture from the period. A shaped apron adds subtle movement beneath the top, while the single drawer—fitted with a turned wooden pull—offers practical storage for papers or writing accessories. The proportions are well judged: compact enough for a study, bedroom, or salon, yet substantial enough to read as a serious piece of furniture rather than an accent table.

Versatile in placement, this table works equally well as a writing table, center table, or refined side table, bringing with it the quiet authority and understated elegance associated with 19th-century French interiors.
