FRENCH MIDCENTURY STEEL AND BRASS TRIPOD STOOL IN THE STYLE OF MAISON JANSEN

$2,700

This French midcentury stool, designed in the spirit of Maison Jansen, combines clean architectural lines with subtle neoclassical ornament. The triangular seat, newly upholstered in a textured neutral fabric, is suspended within a slender steel frame that opens into a tripod base, creating a light and sculptural presence.

Each corner of the seat is secured by distinctive brass mounts cast in the form of stylized swan heads. The gracefully curved necks and defined beaks introduce a refined decorative note, referencing classical motifs often revisited in French decorative arts. These gilt elements provide a warm contrast to the cooler tone of the steel structure, reinforcing the piece's balance between ornament and restraint.

The design remains practical and well-considered: a central ring stretcher stabilizes the frame while maintaining visual openness, and the splayed legs, terminating in rounded feet, give the stool a grounded yet airy stance. The tied seat construction adds a casual, atelier-like detail that contrasts nicely with the otherwise tailored metalwork.

Elegant without excess, this stool functions equally well as seating, a dressing room accent, or a sculptural occasional piece, integrating easily into both traditional and contemporary interiors.
