PAIR OF 19TH CENTURY ASIAN FAUX BAMBOO SIDE TABLES WITH RATTAN TOPS

$5,995

This pair of Asian side tables dates to the 19th century and is executed in the faux bamboo manner, a style widely favored in Asia and later adopted internationally for its graphic structure and naturalistic appeal. Crafted in hardwood carved and jointed to imitate bamboo culms and nodes, the tables display careful attention to proportion and surface detail.

Each table features a square top inset with a woven rattan panel, framed by a molded wooden border. The aprons are formed from interconnected faux bamboo stretchers arranged in a geometric pattern, providing both visual interest and structural stability. The legs are similarly articulated with carved nodes and terminate in rounded feet, reinforcing the bamboo illusion throughout.

The wood surfaces retain a rich, warm patina with visible tonal variation and wear consistent with age, lending depth and authenticity to the pair. While closely matched, minor variations are present, as expected in handmade 19th-century furniture.

Well-suited for use as side tables, lamp tables, or bedside tables, this pair offers decorative versatility and strong sculptural presence, working equally well in traditional interiors or more eclectic settings that favor texture and natural materials.
