PAIR OF ENGLISH 19TH CENTURY PINE CABINETS WITH BLACK GRANITE TOPS

$16,800

This pair of English pine cabinets from the 19th century features a clean rectilinear form enriched with carved classical detail and black stone tops that appear to be granite. Each cabinet is fitted with a pair of paneled doors inset with wire mesh, opening to a shelved interior that provides useful concealed storage while maintaining a lighter visual presence than solid doors alone. The carved surrounds, rosette details, and molded cornice give the pair a restrained Neoclassical character, while the pale stripped pine keeps them grounded and usable.

Their proportions make them especially versatile. They could work well as side cabinets, server cabinets, or substantial bedside chests, and they would also sit convincingly in a kitchen, breakfast room, mudroom, or country house interior where practical storage and durable surfaces matter. The black stone tops provide contrast against the lightened pine and make the pair visually stronger and more architectural.

From the photos, the pine surfaces appear to have been stripped or refinished at some point, giving them their current lighter tone. The tops appear to be black granite rather than marble, and may be later.

Overall, this is a handsome and functional pair with good scale, useful depth, and decorative detail that remains controlled rather than fussy. Overall, this is a handsome and functional pair with good scale, useful depth, and decorative detail that remains controlled rather than fussy.
