PAIR OF ENGLISH 19TH CENTURY SPOOL-TURNED STOOLS WITH NEW UPHOLSTERY

$4,500

This pair of English stools dates to the 19th century and features a robust turned-wood construction characteristic of vernacular English furniture of the period. Each stool is raised on four spool-turned legs joined by matching spool-turned stretchers on all sides, creating a strong, grounded base with clear visual rhythm.

The frames retain a rich, warm patina with visible variation in tone and surface wear, consistent with age and long use. The turning is crisp yet understated, prioritizing proportion and durability over ornamentation—typical of functional English seating intended for domestic interiors.

Both stools have been newly upholstered in a neutral, textured fabric, finished with a line of decorative nailhead trim along the lower edge. The upholstery refresh brings comfort and versatility while allowing the turned wood bases to remain the dominant visual feature.

Well-suited for use as footstools, occasional seating, or low accent stools at the foot of a bed or beside a chair, this pair works comfortably in traditional, country house, or layered interiors.
