PAIR OF ENGLISH HUNT SCENE PAINTINGS BY ALFRED WHEELER, 19TH CENTURY

$8,995

This handsome pair of English sporting paintings by Alfred Wheeler (1851–1932) captures two complementary moments during a traditional fox hunt, one depicting a mounted rider clearing a hedge at speed and the other pausing on horseback while surveying the countryside. Together they celebrate the excitement, athleticism, and pageantry long associated with the English hunting tradition.

Alfred Wheeler came from one of England's best-known families of sporting artists and became particularly admired for his accomplished depictions of horses and riders. His paintings are distinguished by lively compositions, careful observation of equine anatomy, and an ability to convey movement without sacrificing clarity. In these works, the vivid scarlet hunting coats provide a striking contrast against the muted winter landscape, drawing the eye immediately to the riders while beautifully balancing the pair as decorative companions.

Presented in matching gilt wood frames, the paintings work equally well above a console, in a library, study, sporting room, or country house interior. Whether appreciated for their connection to English equestrian traditions or simply for their strong decorative appeal, they offer the timeless charm of classic sporting art by a recognized British painter.
