PETITE FRENCH FAUX BAMBOO MIRROR IN TURNED WOOD, CIRCA 1900

$525

A charming French faux bamboo mirror dating to circa 1900, crafted in turned wood to imitate the natural segmented form of bamboo. The frame features warm honey-toned coloration and finely turned details at each corner and terminal, giving the piece a refined yet relaxed decorative character associated with the faux bamboo movement of the late 19th century.

Compact in scale, this mirror works beautifully in smaller spaces where a decorative accent is desired without visual heaviness. It would sit well in a powder room, entryway, dressing area, or layered into a gallery wall alongside other natural or folk-inspired objects. The linear structure and symmetrical turning details create a balanced silhouette that feels both architectural and light.

Faux bamboo furnishings became highly popular in France and England during the late 19th century, influenced by Victorian fascination with exoticism and organic forms. This example retains a clean, understated elegance that allows it to blend easily into a variety of interiors, from traditional and English Country House settings to more eclectic or collected spaces.

The mirror maintains a warm aged patina with surface wear consistent with age, contributing to its authentic antique character.
