VICTORIAN PERIOD ENGLISH 19TH CENTURY COPPER FINIAL WITH VERDIGRIS PATINA

$1,195

An English Victorian period copper finial from the 19th century with verdigris patina. This English Victorian period copper finial from the 19th century captivates with its rich verdigris patina and subtle hints of turquoise that add a layer of depth to its already intriguing appearance. Crafted from copper, the finial's beautifully aged surface tells a story of decades spent gracing the pinnacle of an architectural structure, where exposure to the elements has transformed its original sheen into a fascinating blend of colder tones. The finial's elegant, circular form showcases the craftsmanship of the Victorian era, with its simple lines and classic silhouette offering a timeless appeal. The circular base is rests on measures 6.5" of diameter. The verdigris patina, a result of natural oxidation over the years, not only enhances the finial's aesthetic but also serves as a testament to its enduring quality and historical significance. In a contemporary home, this Victorian copper finial can be repurposed as a distinctive decorative object. Its rich patina and unique form make it an ideal conversation piece when placed atop a mantel, console table, or as part of a curated vignette in a living room or entryway. The finial's weathered appearance contrasts beautifully with modern interiors, providing a touch of rustic charm and a connection to the past. Alternatively, the finial could be used in an outdoor setting, such as a garden or patio, where its verdigris patina would complement the natural surroundings, adding an element of history and architectural interest. Whether displayed indoors or outdoors, this 19th-century copper finial brings a sense of Victorian elegance and timeless beauty to any space, making it a cherished addition to any home decor.
